BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Champion heartily disapproves of Miss Brash's bidding. He says it's not scientific. That's one reason he dislikes it. Another, undoubtedly, is that it frequently fixes him.

"When I've got a decent chance for game, I just bid game," Miss Brash says. "If you monkey around with a lot of scientific bids, they know what to lead against you.

Whether or not that theory had anything to do with Mr. Champion's lead in today's deal, the fact remains that he did not get his hand on the killer, which was the lone diamond.

Instead, he led the king of clubs. Mr. Dale played the queen on this trick, a conventional play suggesting that the opening leader underlead his ace on the next club play.

Miss Brash

Mr. Champion correctly read this as indicating that his partner had the jack of clubs. The queen could hardly be a singleton as that would give Miss Brash the unlikely holding of five clubs to the jack.

In any case, Mr. Champion now saw the possibility of getting in one of his low trumps by entering his partner's hand with a club and ruffing a diamond return. Accordingly he led his diamond at trick two.

On a hasty analysis there appears to be no way to prevent the diamond ruff. But Miss Brash found a way. On the bidding it was likely that Mr. Champion held the ace of hearts.

So she won the second trick with dummy's queen of diamonds and returned the king of hearts on which she placed her last club.

Mr. Champion won with the ace of hearts and returned a low club. But it was too late.

Miss Brash had effectively cut the communication line. She ruffed the club and drove out the ace of spades. She then ruffed the heart return, picked up the remaining trumps, led to dummy's king of diamonds and took the marked finesse of the ten of diamonds on the way back. The rest of her hand was then good.
