BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

When you are playing with a good partner and, in following suit to a trick, he plays what you believe to be an unnecessarily high card, it is probable that he is trying to send you a message.

Such a play occurred in today's deal and while Mr. Abel might have made the hand in any case by guessing it right, still the defenders gave him a chance to go wrong. Which he did.

Miss Brash's horrible overcall was completely ignored—as it deserved to be. Against the final contract of six hearts she led the king of spades.

Mr. Abel won with the ace and saw that there were only two possible losers—a spade and a diamond. He could take a club finesse either way and, if successful, get rid of a diamond or a spade on the third round of clubs.

Miss Brash

Instead of trying to guess the position of the queen of clubs so early in the hand, however, he decided to give the defenders the opportunity to make an error. So he took one round of trumps and then led his last spade, which Miss Brash won with the queen.

Another spade lead at this point would let Mr. Abel ruff in dummy while discarding a diamond from his hand. A club return would trap Mr. Masters' queen and make the slam a laydown.

But Miss Brash did not make either of these returns. She promptly made her only safe return, a diamond. Mr. Abel still had a guess to make and he guessed wrong. He took a club finesse toward Mr. Masters and went down one.

Why was Miss Brash able to hit on the diamond return? It was no accident and the principal credit belongs to Mr. Masters. At trick three, when Mr. Abel led a spade and Miss Brash won with the queen, he played the ten spot.

Miss Brash knows that Mr. Masters always has a reason for any play he makes. She was also pretty sure that he had started with more than two spades. So, when he played an unnecessarily high spade on the second lead of that suit, she correctly figured that he was suggesting the lead of the higher of the other two plain suits—in this case, diamonds.
