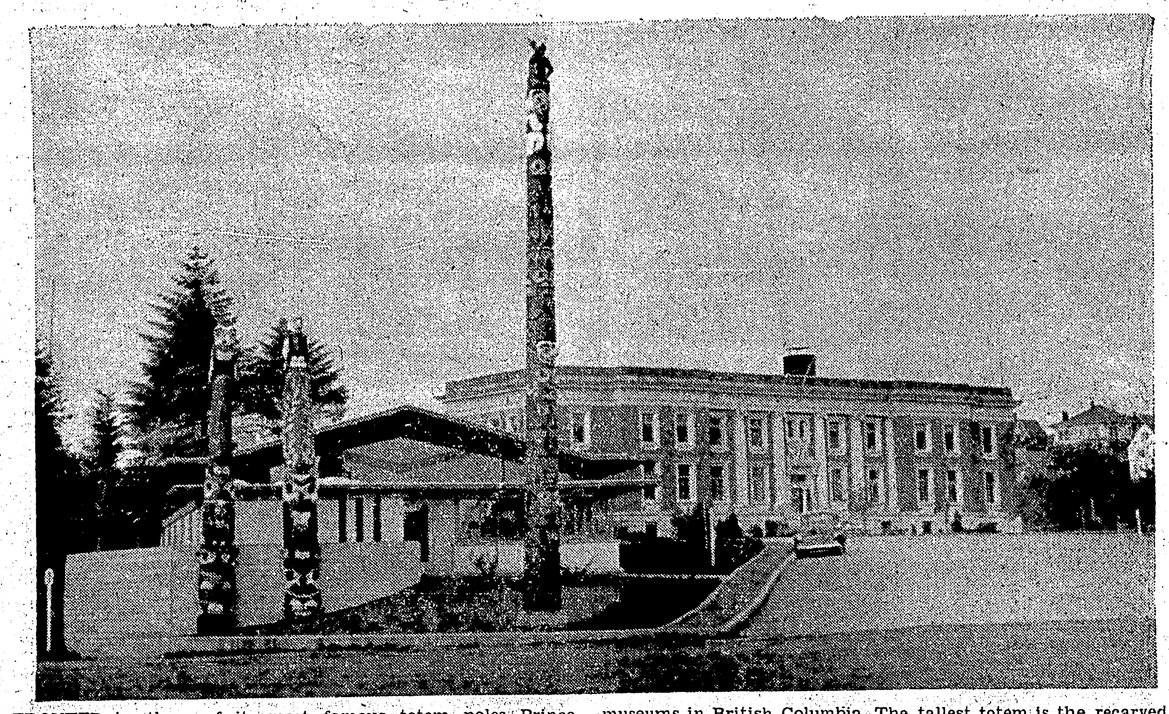
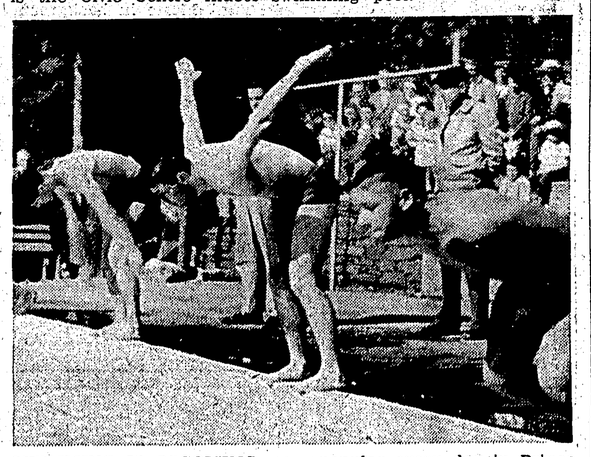
Prince Rupert offers variety of interests for visitors



FRONTED by three of its most famous totem poles Prince Rupert's Museum of Northern British Columbia is a "must" on the itineraries of tourists to the city. The museum's collection of Indian relics and rare exhibits make it one of the best museums in British Columbia. The tallest totem is the recarved Wolf totem, which with the museum itself, were two of the city's B.C. Centennial projects. —Staff photo by Gary Oakes.

FOCAL POINT of city's recreational and cultural activities is Civic Centre, one of the finest community centres in the province. During the winter program the Civic Centre offers basketball, floor hockey, badminton for sports fans, arts and crafts for seniors and juniors, and is the central meeting place of scores of organizations. Also housed in the Civic Centre is the Prince Rupert public library. Adjacent to the Civic Centre is the Civic Centre indoor swimming pool.



SWIMMING IS BECOMING more popular every day in Prince Rupert now that the city has two pools, the $250,000 Civic Centre indoor swimming pool and the outdoor Gyro pool at McClymont Park. Photo above shows swimmers taking part in last Monday's Labor Day swim meet.

HIS WORSHIP Mayor Peter J. Lester, head of Prince Rupert's 6-man city council, is slated to welcome the many delegates to the Associated Boards of Trade convention opening here tomorrow.
