KERCHOONOSE FALLS INTO LAP

Barber and Patrons Astonished as Supposed Victim Puts It In His Pocket.

White Salmon, March 8.—George Bradford, of Melbourne, Australia, literally blew off his nose while in the chair of a local barber shop getting his hair cut last night. A hard sneeze sent his proboscis tumbling into the apron stretched across his lap, much to the amazement of the barber and waiting customers.

Bradford picked up his nose and put it into his pocket, naively remarking, "That's my fool proof nose. I call it that more because I lost the original in a foolish way than from the fact that while in the Canadian North others were suffering from frost bitten noses through carelessness, while mine was proof against frost."

I was watching men clear some land near Victoria, B. C., ten years ago, and although warned, failed to beat it to a place of safety, sticking my fool nose over a log to watch the blast. When I recovered consciousness the best part of my nose was gone. Of course, that nose I just put into my pocket is an artificial one, of which I have two, in case of emergency. A nose of that kind is inconvenient, but it helps out looks and has given me much fun in a way."

Bradford related a number of experiences, one of which was the theft of his nose while travelling to Winnipeg. He had fallen into a doze, when a 2-year-old boy toddled back to his knees and failing to get his attention caught him by the nose, pulled it and went toddling down the aisle with part of his friend's anatomy.

"Sir Walter Raleigh was soaked with water by the Indians when he introduced smoking for the first time, but he didn't have it over me much," said Bradford.

"I once dipped the end of my nose in some whisky and touched it off with a match just to have some fun with a couple of Hindu friends. It was no joke, though, for one of the East Indians sussed me across the face with a wet towel almost as hard as he could swing it."

Bradford is interested in timber, and went from here to the timber belt near Glenwood, where he will investigate the stand and go out by way of Klickitat Pass, thence to North Yakima.
