CANADA NOT AFFECTED BY MONROE DOCTRINE

Great Britain Strong Enough to Protect Colonies Without the Interference of Foreign Nations

In view of the diversity of opinion around town as to the influence of the Monroe Doctrine in the present crisis, The News prints the following opinions from London and New York authorities:—

Pears
Pear's Cyclopaedia (published in London) says: The Monroe Doctrine refers to a formal declaration made by President James Monroe that no European Power should be permitted to interfere with the concerns of government of any of the independent States of North or South America. It also sets forth that the American States would not try to interfere in European affairs.

Webster's
Webster's New International Dictionary (published at London and New York) says: "Monroe Doctrine, the statement or rule of foreign policy of the United States, first formally announced by President Monroe, December 2, 1823, to the effect that the United States will regard as an unfriendly act any attempt on the part of European powers to extend their systems in the Western Hemisphere, or any interference to oppress, or in any manner control the destiny of governments in this hemisphere whose independence has been acknowledged by the United States."
