MEMORABLE SERMON BY DR. W. T. HERRIDGE

of God and manifestly intended for noble uses.

"I have often heard a young man say, 'I want to go out and see life'; but don't mistake life for death, or the real for the stolen garments of life. Life cannot be measured in a sordid way. It was the supreme benediction of the Christ of God who came that we might have life—that we might serve our brethren more broadly."

The word culture was in bad grace. It had been used in curious forms. Yet, true culture included neither pride nor arrogance. It was never self-centered. It always thought of the rights of others.

Independence in our age has gone mad. The term servant had now a tinge of reproach. The struggle was not to be of service but how not to serve. "Anyone who is not serving in some capacity owes the world an apology for living." All this must be reversed.

The speaker hoped he was not narrow but, after many years of experience, he believed the work of the Christian ministry was the noblest in the land. The opportunity, too, of the ministry was greatest. The troubles of the times had made men think. They haven't been used to it and it hurts. But the frivolity of the past was disappearing. A seriousness had taken hold of the people and they were crying out for God. We could never be the same again. Our deeper experiences would either make us better or worse.

The speaker "could not break away from this nightmare of this European war." It was awful; but Britain had not sought it. He paid a tribute to the British navy, "which even tonight enables us to sit here in peace." We had no quarrel with many aspects of the German people. We could still admire their music, their poetry, and their philosophy; but with the German law of iron and might there could be no truce. Canada was bound up in this fight. "When Britain is at war we are and if we have to we will send a dozen contingents" in order to bring this fight to a successful issue.

While he believed it was a just war on our part, it was not a time for boasting. All the right was not on our side and all the wrong on Germany's. It was a time for self-examination and penitence before God. "Perhaps this stern chastisement was required to put a check on our follies; to give us a fresh start in a nobler direction; to bring out the best that is in us in order to arrange for the final triumph of His Kingdom, and for a peace that shall abide.

The conflict was not one of armies and navies. It is one of ideals. No nation can be neutral in the strife. The sympathies of those who believe in the right must eventually come together. "There is no East and no West but Europe and Asia are all one when God's hour strikes the world."

He denounced the kind of life that put all the emphasis on bank accounts and vacant lots—many of them miles from any city. We had better get back to use the land for the purposes intended by the Almighty. "I am not making a political speech but I think there is something wrong with the land policy of your province. You need a new perspective. You must begin to reduce your imports and produce your wants at home."

There are more important things in life than prosperity. We can stand privations or the loss of loved ones, or even death itself so long as we do not lose our souls. The man who has lost his soul has lost everything.

The test of the Church of the future will not be its creeds or its orthodoxy, but the way in which it serves humanity. If it doesn't do its duty it will be trodden beneath the feet of men. The Church must hold its grip on the unseen as well as serve. He told of a woman on board ship in a storm. In her anxiety, she spoke to the captain. He replied, "It's very stormy, but we must trust in Providence." "Oh, captain, has it come to that?" was the reply. There was too much of this point of view. In the past too much attention was given to talk about the other world. He again told a telling story. A weary washerwoman, all covered with soapuds, had a rhyme something like this, "We will all sit down by the bank of the river and there we'll do nothing for ever and ever." That idea was wrong. Nobody need apologize for wanting to continue to live here. It's unnatural to urge a healthy boy to hurry up and die. The world was full of the beauties of God, and what we should do was to put them within the reach of all. Another story clinched his point. A certain bishop who was ill consulted a doctor. The physician advised a change of climate, preferably Algiers. The bishop protested that he couldn't leave his charge. "Well," said the doctor, "it's either Algiers or Heaven." "Then in that case," said the bishop, "I'll go to Algiers."

He made a strong plea for the Church to undertake the reforms of the earth, and leave the future to take care of itself. The churches must take up their work more seriously. They must get together. We are too sober at present, too respectable. The people expect nothing and get nothing. A new spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion was needed. A real revival war was imperative, if the Church would fulfill her mission. The attitude was too much like that of the usher of a fashionable church to a colored woman who came in to worship. As she warmed up under the influence of the sermon she clapped her hands and uttered "Praise the Lord!" The usher told her to stop. "How can I stop, honey,"
