AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JUAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by 'Fruit-a-tives'. I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking 'Fruit-a-tives', I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives'."

REMARKABLE STORY EXPLAINS WHY CANADIANS WERE DELAYED

STRANGE WOMAN TELLS SAM HUGHES GERMAN ZEPPELIN WAS WATCHING TROOPSHIP—WAS THEIR REASON WHY MEGANTIC DELAYED

A remarkable article has appeared in Maclean's Magazine giving what purports to be the inside story of the reason why the Princess Pats were taken off the steamer Megantic at Quebec on August 29th last and detained at Valcartier along with the other Canadian troops for another month before being sent across the Atlantic.

The story is written by C. Lin-ton Sibley with an air of the most intimate knowledge of all that happened, and of the words and even the unspoken thoughts of the chief actors, who are Hon. Sam Hughes and a mysterious lady, with Sir Robert Borden in a minor third role.

It appears that on August 28th Hon. Sam Hughes was dining at the Chateau Frontenac in Quebec. He was alone with his thoughts and the menu. That is to say he was unattended by any of his staff, but at the same table was seated a lady, refined, beautiful, but pallid. Let us, however, follow the example of Major-General Hughes, and scrutinize the lady more carefully, for the author, Mr. Sibley, says she made a great impression on the Minister.

"The striking pallor of her face was its most striking quality, seeming a tint rather than a shade. Blending into a delicate brownness at the throat, it bespoke healthy vitality. The heavy coils of her hair were black, and her eyes, seriously and vaguely tragic as they were, yet glowed with warmth and animation. She was slender, but every move was a study in grace. The curves of her figure all low, yet there was no suggestion of angularity. Indeed, her figure suggested suppleness and strength beyond the ordinary."

The reader can now picture the twain—the grim soldier and the refined, beautiful, but pallid lady with vaguely tragic eyes. Before she left the table she accosted him. He was munching an olive at the time. She warned him that she had news for him—news which if he valued the welfare of his country, he must know about. He must meet her alone on the Terrace at the far end under the citadel at 9 o'clock.

Well, if you had been in his place what would you have done? Remember that this man, quietly munching an olive when he received the warning was at the head of the Canadian forces, and the country was at war. The cares of the country were on him. He needed all the news he could get. He decided to meet the refined, but pallid lady on the far end of the Terrace at 9 o'clock, and to meet her alone. And he did.

They meet. She tells him she is of the British Secret Service; she knows all about the arrangements for sending the Canadian contingent away; she says the Germans know it, too, and unless the plans are changed not a man of the 33,000 Canadians will ever be heard of again once the ships leave the shore. She tells him that the Germans have a Zeppelin in the Quebec mountains and mean to sink the troop ships with the Canadians on board. She begs that the Princess Pats be taken off the Megantic at Quebec next day, and that no troops be sent away until flying machines have located and destroyed the German Zeppelin.

What could Hon. Sam Hughes do in view of this warning? Could he risk letting the men go? Even while he talked with the lady, she suddenly squeezed his arm. A man approached. Ha! They were shadowed. So they engaged in banter and airy persiflage until the man in rubber shoes passed by. What was the Minister of Militia to do? Was he to heed the warning? According to the published story he did heed it, ordered the Princess Pats off the Megantic next morning, to the surprise of all Canada, and left that regiment and all the others for another month at Valcartier while flying machines searched the Laurentian wilderness for the hang-out of a German Zeppelin. Then one day, on September 27th, a flying machine lit at Valcartier while Sam Hughes was conversing with Sir Robert Borden, a hurried message was given by the airman, and the Minister of Militia gave instant orders for all troops to pack up and make sail for England. Evidently the enemy Zeppelin had been found and destroyed, and the Canadian Armada saved.

New what about all this? It purports to be true. It is written in the most intimate way, as if the writer had his information from the principals. It appears in Maclean's Magazine, which is published by Colonel John Bayne Maclean, a well known military man. Not only is the Minister of Militia the principle figure in the story, but the Prime Minister is brought into it as the one and only confidant of General Hughes.

Is this story true, or is it a hoax? The country ought to know. Did Major General the Honorable Sam Hughes order the Princess Pats off the Megantic on August 29 and keep them kicking their heels at Valcartier until September 27 because of a warning he received from a refined, beautiful, but pallid lady while he munched an olive in the dining room of the Chateau Frontenac? Did the warning of the mysterious lady have the effect of keeping the first contingent of 33,000 Canadians a month longer in Canada than they would otherwise have been?

If so, what proof was found on or before September 27 that the story told by the mysterious lady was a true one? Was the Zeppelin found? Where? When? Can the wreck of it be put in the national museum at Ottawa?

No story quite so sensational as this, and with dates and names given in so definite a way, has been made public in Canada since Colonel Hughes returned from the South African War. It is a whale of a story. It makes the mildest of recent works of fiction look tame and, we may add, pallid.

What is Hon. Sam Hughes going to do about it? Will the Prime Minister explain to Parliament? Or will the mysterious lady come forward with further particulars of the affair?—Toronto Star.

Not Treating.

Joek McTavish and two English friends went out on the loch on a fishing trip, and it was agreed that the first man to catch a fish should later stand treat at the inn. As McTavish was known to be the best fisherman thereabouts his friends took considerable delight in assuring him that he had as good as lost already.

"An', d'ye ken," said Joek, in speaking of it afterward, "baith o' them had a guid bite, an' wis sae mean they wadna' pu' in."

"Then you lost?" asked the listener.

"Oh, no. I didna' pit ony bait on my hook."
