Mining On Queen Charlottes.

Of late the Queen Charlotte Islands have been much in the public eye on account of the spruce production that has been going on there. Soon it will be in the public eye because of the mining developments. There are richer deposits than those on the islands and also there are larger ore bodies, but the ore there is said to be found in good paying quantities and of sufficient richness to give good returns to the miner. A good deal of it is tied up with crown grants, however.

The Ikeda mine has been working steadily and has a good lot of ore in the bunkers ready for shipment. Soon shipments will be made regularly from the Islands and the miners will come here to spend their money.

This is the mining centre of the north. The Stewart, Alice Arm and a half a hundred smaller camps will all make this the centre for securing supplies and the place to take a holiday. Mining is one of the things we have to encourage as much as possible. It is good business to do it.

Miner Has Own Outlook on Life.

Everyone like a miner. He is always open hearted and open handed. The life in the hills gives him a vision which many of us never see. He has an outlook on life all his own. He sees nature at its hardest and yet he does not grouch. He leads a hard life and yet there are many compensations. The eternal gamble keeps him going. There is excitement in the search for gold or metals, the mining of which will bring gold. That perpetual expectation is the spice of life. It is the only thing that keeps a newspaperman from getting crazier than he is. It is what lured Columbus on. It is what carried Stefansson into the northern wilds. The eternal expectation is the lure of the miner and it keeps him alive.

When the miner comes to town he is a good fellow. Some take advantage of his generosity, if he has struck it rich. Others try to beat him down on the price of his mine after he has found it. In Prince Rupert we want to encourage the miners, to treat them well, to do everything possible to bring them here, and to use our influence to develop the mines of the neighborhood.

Electricity For Heating Houses.

The time will come when we shall have to use some other heat than coal. The supply will become exhausted and then the numerous water and other powers that are at present going to waste will be utilized for heating purposes.

If we could use electric heat generally in our homes there would be a great saving in dirt, in laundry work, in work for the housewives and in doctors' bills. Perhaps it will become possible eventually to use electrical energy for domestic purposes to a much greater extent than at present.

Gas is used a good deal in some cities, but electric energy is carried and laid on so much easier than gas, it is more mobile. The fixtures can be changed to suit household changes. Everything is in favor of electric power except the price, and that should come down in time.

No Wood Fuel Can Be Obtained.

It is curious that in a city built in the midst of woods there should be no wood fuel, or next to none. Wood is used a good deal in most cities and is brought in on the trains and on scows from points many miles away. The mill wood from Chemainus is taken to Victoria, sawn into suitable lengths and delivered at the homes for fuel. It is curious that no wood is used here.

Coal is cheaper than wood and it is less bother to the person who has to attend the fires. In furnaces it is the only fuel that is worth considering. It will be a happy day for Prince Rupert when some of the nearby coal fields are developed.
