LUMBERJACK ORATOR GETS GOOD HEARING

Speaks to Rotarians at St. Louis Convention This Morning

LABOR AND CAPITAL

ST. LOUIS, June 20.—"If employers would spend half as much time cultivating the friendship and good will of labor as they do fighting labor organizations and most agitators, there wouldn't be a labor problem," Sherman Rogers, the "lumberjack orator," told the delegates to the fourteenth annual convention of Rotary International this morning during the course of a picturesque speech on a first contact in business. Rogers is a picturesque character often referred to as the Billy Sunday of the industrial world. A former lumberjack in the great northwest woods, he has been touring the country during the last four or five years telling big business just where it gets started with the wrong foot from the workingman's point of view.

"We waste too much time talking about the labor agitator," the speaker said. "He can only be recognized as the logical friend of the worker where the management has refused to extend their friendship—either refused or didn't have time enough to be friendly. I'm not dreaming when I say it cuts out trouble when you make the workman you employ your friend. Let me illustrate.

Schwab's Visit

I was in the Seattle shipyards working as a helper in 1917 when Charles M. Schwab made his tour of the American shipbuilding institutions. I don't need to tell you what we thought about him. We'd heard he was a labor lifter, a bloated magnate. He was certainly the right bower of Morgan whom we considered at that time the arch enemy of labor in this country. If Mr. Schwab could have heard the remarks, especially among common labor in the shipyards, I question whether he would have ever stepped inside our plant. I heard no commendations. Vito
