Prince Rupert's "Sea Serpent"

Here are interesting pictures of the skeleton of Prince Rupert's own "sea serpent," which has been identified by Dr. W. A. Clemens, director of the Nanaimo biological station, as being a basking shark but about which there still seems to be much difference of opinion locally. The top picture shows a view of the skeleton stretched out on a stand at the government wharf. The lower picture indicates the size of the vrtebrae in comparison with the human hand. The interesting find was made by Hugo Sandstrum, local fisherman.
