The poor player is the best thing for sport, according to Prof. Ramsay Traquair, head of the department of architecture at McGill University and authority on pastimes. Popularity, professionalism; and what he calls the stranglehold of rules have turned most games into "complicated corpses" he declared at a meeting of the Royal Montreal Curling Club. Prof. Traquair said he had no better wish for the club than obscurity and plenty of poor players. In fact he ad hopes of a club that would expel any member who won a championship. He pointed out that the majority of players in any sport belonged to the poor class compewhich some popular sports originated was described by Prof. Traquair. Golf grew from Scottish shepherds practising field hockey. When it became a rich man's game it carried with it the loose knickerbockers of the lowland shepherd. Masons, held up in their work by frosty weather, began sliding ordinary stones over the ice and so curling got its start

A University of Alberta football hero risked his reputation in the field but proved his prowess at gulping ice cream in the tuck shop by consuming three bricks in 25 minutes flat.

Indignant at cynical bystanders who doubted his assertion he could nandle a whole brick by himself, three bricks in 35 minutes and call-

After the first brick, which disappeared in four minutes, the gridiron star was sternly refused an amendment to the wager by which subsequent bricks would be allowed to soften while another was eaten. The second brick occupied him seven minutes.

Desperate, the challenger craftily chose a rich cherry and nut mixture as the last hurdle. The ice cream champ laid it away for a lapsed time of 25 minutes and then called for hot coffee,
