TODAY'S STOCKS DRAMA IS

"So Red the Rose," With Margaret Sullavan, and "Hands Across The Table," With Carole Lombard

A poignant romance of the South during the war between the States, "So Red the Rose," and a breezy comedy, "Hands Across the Table," comprise a mid-week double bill being presented at the Capitol In "So Red the Rose," Margaret Sullavan, heading the cast, has the part of the beautiful daughter of an aristocratic southern family which, with fortitude and courage, faces the ordeals of those brave days. It is the story of Miss Sullavan's struggle to keep bright her love for the man of her heart who is determined to ignore the cause in which his family and friends firmly believe. Randolph Scott has the male lead, other important members of the cast being Janet Beecher, Walter Connolly, Elizabeth Patterson and Dickie Moore.

Sparkling dialogue, uproarious comedy and breezy performances by its stars characterize "Hands Across the Table" in which Carole Lombard displays her talents in a role entirely different to anything she has been seen in in the past. She is a poor but attractive manicurist while Fred MacMurray is a penniless playboy. Ralph Bellamy, Marie Prevost and Ruth Donnelly are also included in the cast.
