Gardening

All flower lovers are now looking forward to the show on Monday next. The season being so poor, it had been suggested that the show be postponed but it is now decided to go ahead with it, no matter what the weather. Postponed events never amount to much.

There was very nearly a clash between the dinner for Professor Bars under auspices of the Horticultural Society and that for Governor Smith of the Rotary Club but the Rotary Club have made their arrangements for Friday night leaving Saturday open to the flower growers. Professor Bars is an authority on horticulture and many members of the Rotary Club want to hear him. Bill Coates of the C.P.K. promises to have the Princess Adelaide in the city in time for the Rotary dinner.

It was sad to see the delphiniums all swept down by the wind and rain last week and the roses and other flowers injured but nothing could be done about it, so gardeners are carrying on as best they may. In spite of the elements, some of the local gardens look quite bright and there will be a good display at the show of coltess dahlias and other flowers.

Tom Priest had a very fine bed of roses recently in his garden on Graham Avenue. Unfortunately, they were at their best only a day or two. The W. and R. did their worst and Tom's roses suffered.

One of the sights of the city is Dave Borland's window boxes. They have been outstandingly brilliant recently.

Glad's are very late this year. It looks to me just now as if there would be very few at the show. However, there are a lot of gardens I do not see and there may be surprises in store.

Sweet-pea growers are bemoaning the fact that some of their vines have been messed up by the rain and wind. Those who tied them carefully and looked after them day by day have them intact and a few days of sunshine makes a great difference to these flowers. There should be keen competition between local growers.

A few days ago a fisherman sent me a sack of shells for decorating the garden. I did not see him and he did not leave his name. The shell were very useful and I wish the donor would call and let me thank him.—H.F.P.

BETTY LOWMAN ROWS INTO PRINCE RUPERT

fisherman, and crew. They were scouting for fish and did not usually come that way. One of the members of the crew had wanted to come up to see a waterfall so they approached the shore and spied the canoe. "This is embarrassing for me to tell," admitted the deeply bronzed capable looking girl, "but I must admit that, when those natives took me aboard their boat, I cried. I was so happy after that desperate situation." Miss Lowman was taken to Hartley Bay by the Kitlope. From there Jack Pahl took her to Lowe Inlet where she obtained food and clothes and started off up Grenville Channel. But there was further trouble in store.

In Grenville Channel more stormy weather was encountered and the canoe was swamped again. Once more the girl swam ashore with the canoe in tow and, after resting and collecting herself, paddled back out into mid-channel to wait for assistance which came from the fishing boat Yanagi of a Japanese named Tanaka. Back she was taken to Lowe Inlet.

Starting out again up Grenville Channel, she reached her next stop at Claxton and then on to Inverness where she spent Tuesday night as the guest of Robert Johnstone, veteran canneryman, and Mrs. Johnstone whom she had previously met at Klemtu down the coast. She arrived in Prince Rupert at 2:20 p.m. yesterday.

Lost Everything
In the swamping in Douglas Channel Miss Lowman's loss included three cameras, all her films, charts, her log containing names and addresses of people with whom she had planned to communicate. There was a trickle of fresh water coming down the rocky ledge. That made the situation not quite so bad in spite of the lack of food. Having saved her sleeping bag, she was not too uncomfortable.

Miss Lowman, on her trip, carries no watch, no compass, no calendar. "It is just a vacation," she says. "I wanted to see the country and chose this way of doing so," hinting that its economy recommended the mode. The average distance per day she covers has been twenty-six miles, travelling about three miles per hour. Some days she had travelled upwards of thirty miles. Miss Lowman, who has been studying vocal music at Pomona College, California, and has a year more to finish at University of Washington in Seattle, on starting out, was accompanied by a Seattle girl, Florence Steele, who became sick after the first week and returned home from Pender Harbor.

Crossing Queen Charlotte Sound from Pultney Point, Malcolm Island, Miss Lowman explained that she was caught in a fog but finally got across just below Blunder Harbor. She had headed straight into the Sound. Later she made Allison Harbor.

During her trip Miss Lowman has made a number of exploratory side trips into various inlets including Jervis Inlet, Princess Louise Inlet, Seymour Inlet, Rivers Inlet, Ocean Falls, Salmon River, Douglas Channel, Kitimaat and Matheson Channel.

The girl canoeist plans to go as far north as Sitka providing weather permits. Her father, a cannery operator, is at Ketchikan.

Her First Request
Miss Lowman's first request, on arriving here, was for a glass of fresh cow's milk. Her next concern was to go to the hospital to see an injured logger whom she had met while coming up the coast.

"It seems strange to be back again in civilization with automobiles and everything," observed the girl adventurer. She reported receiving wonderful hospitality all along the British Columbia coast. She has been showered with kindness everywhere she went.

Miss Lowman's Sunday name is "Beatrice Annette" but to her family and friends it is just "Betty."
