Man in the Moon

What about a little Christmas spirit? No not the kind they sell at Mr. Millar's store on Third Avenue.

This is December and Christmas is in the month of December. Wake up!

Jake says the kids are all trying to live up to the season and are planning what Santa Claus is to bring them.

Jingle bells, jingle bells
Jingle up the street
Oh what fun for all of us
Old Santa Claus to meet!
Jingle bells, jingle bells
The time is drawing near
When we gather round the Christmas tree
And Christmas songs we hear.

A man walked into the tire repair shop the other morning and asked to have a patch put on his right eye. It seems he had a blow-out the night before.

After betting that he would eat his hat and losing a local sport is said to have made the rounds of the local men's stores and could not find one soft enough. He is going to send to one of the mail order houses.

Little Mildred had just had her first dip in the sea.
"How did you like it, dearie?"

asked her mother, as she fastened the little six-year-old's frock.
"I didn't like it at all, Mother," she replied coldly. "I sat on a wave, and went through!"

Insurance Agent: "Now that you're married and have the responsibility of a wife you will want to take out some insurance."

Mr. Newlywed: "Insurance? 'Shucks, no. Why, she's not the least bit dangerous."

club an interesting description of South America where he was stationed for several years, dealing more particularly with Argentina although his field had also included Brazil, Uruguay and Paraguay. While all South American republics, except Portuguese Brazil were essentially Spanish, there was a strong British influence in the cosmopolitan Argentine. Commissioner Carpenter stated. Of four billion dollars of foreign investments there, two and a half billion was British, it was estimated. The British was the most progressive element there and it was gratifying to Britishers that the word of an Englishman should be regarded in that country as being synonymous with the bond of a gentleman.

The Commissioner described the great fertile plains of the Pampas with their grain growing and stock raising. The industries were largely primary, there having been little in the way of secondary industries as yet.

Hectic Temperament

Government of the Argentine was along lines similar to that of the United States and there was a very keen interest in politics.

The Argentines were a red-blooded people of hectic temperament and quick temper. The carrying of guns in the hip pocket was a common practice and shootings were commonplace in outbreaks of temper. The speaker gave some humorous incidents of South American quarrels.

Great Honor was was paid to the dead and an annual "Day of the Dead" was observed. Elaborate mausoleums were the scene of even afternoon teas.

Buenos Aires, where Commissioner Carpenter made his headquarters, was one of the most progressive and beautiful cities of the world with its population of 2,250,000 people and enormous buildings. It was suggestive of great wealth and at the same time of great poverty. Streets were of a degree of spaciousness not known anywhere else in the world.

In conclusion, Commissioner Carpenter spoke of the great need for Salvation Army work in South America as elsewhere. Great things had been done in the reformation of criminals there. Many of the people, a large proportion of whom were illiterates, were also without religion. Roman Catholicism was the predominant religion of the country.

Commissioner Carpenter, in opening, said that he had been in Canada only sixteen months but he was greatly impressed. Nothing could prevent it, he believed, from becoming one of the world's really great nations. The Commissioner also referred to the value of the work of the service clubs on behalf of the under-privileged.

President D. G. Borland was in the chair and expressed the appreciation of the club to Commissioner Carpenter for his address. Other guests included Brigadier Walter Carruthers of Wrangell, Adjutant Parkinson of Glen Vowell, Captain Ivan Halsey of Prince Rupert, W. L. Coates of Prince Rupert and J. M. Cave of Vancouver.
