The Divided Dollar

| LERBERT HOOVER, the only living ex-President of the United States was 75 years of age last month, and in valedictory remarks, he issued a warning against government spending and collectivism. He made it plain that if socialization of property had not yet actually arrived, the nation was on the last mile to collectivism, through governmental spending of the savings of the people. There is, he declared, far more courage in reducing debts than in increasing them. Taking out holidays, Sundays and average vacations, there are about 235 working days in the year. This total of 81 days work a year for taxes is about one week out of every month.

"Spending," concluded Hoover, "will absorb between 75 percent and 85 percent of all the savings of the people. In practice it does not work evenly. The few will have some savings, but the many must reduce their standard of living to pay the tax collector. The slogan of a "welfare state" has emerged as a disguise for the totalitarian state."

For those who are avowed believers in the welfare state, this encroachment probably will be considered a welcome step toward the ideal of Socialism, a joyful sacrifice. But to those who retain their belief in a balance between individual responsibility to the nation and individual reward for enterprise and effort, it is proper cause for deep thought.

KEEP FLYING

A AETAL FATIGUE has been given as one of the IVI reasons for aviation accidents. The recent crash near Quebec could more properly be termed a disaster, for the loss of life was exceptionally heavy but in the search for clues as to the cause, the examination of all wreckage is always prompt, and exceedingly thorough.

Metal fatigue has been found to have several origins—such as a flaw within the metal, a rough spot causing excess friction, or an improper fit between two parts. One small scratch, it is believed, September. may be sufficient irritation to start the spread of a weakness, especially in moving sections working under a heavy load. Eventually the structure is so reduced in strength that it can no longer carry on.

The time may come when tired metal will be immediately recognized in any vital spot of an aircraft or other vehicle, and when it does, the excellent safety factor sustained by the air lines will no doubt reach an even higher level.

In the meantime, to avoid air travel merely because of an occasional unexplained air crash is an excessive distortion of prudence.

FAILED TO REACH THEIR GOAL—Seeking the remains of the Ark in which Noah and the animals survived the deluge, these U.S. archaeologists, shown in Istanbul, Turkey, climbed 16,000foot Mount Ararat. Turkey gave the expedition permission for the climb in the face of vigorous Russian protests that the Americans were not seeking the Ark, but spying. The mountain looks down on Russian territory. A Russian aviator first reported having seen the remains of the Ark while flying over Ararat in 1916. Left to right above are Wendall Ogg, health officer and stenographer; Walter I.
